

TeenScreen? What You Need to Know

Thursday, June 15th 2006 – Christopher Hansen

Why does anyone send their children to government propaganda mills? For anyone that needs help with home schooling please go to our candidates page and contact Lynn Chapman.

TeenScreen is just one more reason to get your children out of government schools.

TeenScreen is a Federal Program for screening our children for mental illness. In the public schools where it has been implemented, the screening takes place without a parent's knowledge or consent. In many, many cases, otherwise normal children are diagnosed with some kind of mental illness and treatment is prescribed, which includes drugs which can be very harmful to children. Parents who try to decline risk losing parental rights over the child's health care.

Several parents across the country are trying to sue over the TeenScreen because the screening was done without knowledge and consent. We'll see what happens!

This is a BAD program. Recently, a government sponsored Harvard study said that 50% of Americans are mentally ill. How absurd! (Maybe not. 50% are probably sending their kids to government schools. That has to be a mental disorder. Right?) But you can bet that the TeenScreen results will back up that number. Every teenage girl who cried because she didn't get asked to the prom will be among the number. And in the end, billions of our taxpayer dollars will be used to drug our children.

Naturally the drug companies will or do support this program.
