Dangers of TeenScreen

Comments (2)

To the Editor:

TeenScreen is a dangerous pharmaceutical front group, trolling for their next victims via the public school system.

The majority of parents are up-in-arms over the covert screening of their kids in school, without parental consent.

No science, no tests, all just the opinions and associative thinking of an "expert" with a degree in psychology and some "experts" with no degree whatsoever.

Look up psychology in a dictionary. Its derivation is from psyche, meaning spirit, and ology, meaning study of.

Notice the soaring numbers of the "mentally ill" in the past few years – according to the "experts." We are constantly bombarded by these invented ailments through the media.

Get the truth from www.psychsearch.net and www.cchr.net and do something for your child if they've been a victim of any psych abuse.

We, as spiritual beings, do not get cured of what ails us from drugs. Talk to your parents first and also your parishioner for spiritual help, not the legalized drug dealers; TeenScreen.

" When it comes to the TeenScreen suicide and mental illness survey, parents should just say no. There is probably no group doing more to put America's kids on dangerous psychiatric drugs than TeenScreen. Their survey always gets a huge number of teens screening positive for signs of suicide and mental illness. It is designed to do that. Then instead of partnering teens up with groups that might advocate diet, exercise, counseling, sports or other safe, effective and low cost ways to deal with teen moods, self-doubts and raging hormones, TeenScreen almost always pushes teens in the direction of psychiatrists who prescribe antidepressants that can make teens suicidal and violent. The connection between TeenScreen and the large drug companies that are making billions on psychiatric drugs can be found by going to <http://www.psychsearch.net/> and clicking on the TeenScreen button. The confidential and intrusive survey questions that they ask teens are also there. Many school districts are rejecting TeenScreen to prevent falsely labeling large numbers of students with questionable mental illnesses. TeenScreen is currently being sued in Indiana for this. Local counselors who know the students and who involve the parents stand a far better chance of helping teens than the pharmaceutical front group TeenScreen which is so aggressively pushing its "help" into schools. Parents should Just Say No to TeenScreen. "
